

Container Energy Storage Internal Firewall

Overview

What is a container firewall?

Container firewalls are a type of firewall that secures both the internal and external traffic of containerized applications. By regulating and isolating network traffic to and from containers, this type of firewall can mitigate lateral movement of threats, reduce the risk of container compromise, and in general reduce the potential attack surface.

Do you need a specialized container firewall?

This is where the need for a specialized container firewall becomes essential. Cisco ® Secure Firewall Threat Defense Container (FTDc) is the containerized solution for cloud firewall needs. It delivers the same robust security in container networks that enterprises have gotten used to in traditional data centers.

What is secure firewall Threat Defense container?

In addition to the stateful L3/L4 firewalling, Secure Firewall Threat Defense Container includes powerful VPN capabilities with policy consistency that simplifies how you manage your virtual, physical, and container Secure Firewall solutions.

Does a container firewall protect VM and cloud environments?

Yes. Many organizations deploy virtual firewalls to protect VM and cloud environments and container firewalls to enforce policies inside containerized applications. A container firewall is a type of software firewall that inspects and enforces policies on traffic moving between containers and services.
